AWESOME servants

Awesome visual techs are aware that their job is to create a seamless visual worship experience for the congregation.

They are not “hard and fast committed” to their own agenda, but rather are there to serve the worship experience of the community.

AWESOME timers

Awesome visual techs know that the timing of a slide going up, just before people are about to sing it, is vital to a rich, vibrant worship experience for the church. They don't see sloppy timing, accidental clicking, or blank screens as an option. They even practice.

AWESOMIE spellers

Awesome visual techs know that minimizing distraction, and maximizing the visual experience, is key to worship. They check, and double-check, spellings on all lyrics before doing the service. They are nit-picky about spelling, because bad spelling distracts.

AWESOME creatives

Awesome visual techs know that the right background, the subtle use of motion, the amplifying of the lyrics, and the moving of the hearts of the congregation, is vital to worship. They get training in areas of their weakness, or raise up others who are stronger with visuals.

AWESOME learners

Awesome visual techs look for opportunities to learn from those who are respected in the visual worship tech field. They have software that is designed for ministry presentation, and they learn it with humility – inviting input from the worship leader and others who know that world.

AWESOME supports

Awesome visual techs are always looking for ways to better serve the worship leader, the team, the pastor/teacher, and the congregation. They are easy to talk to, do not get defensive quickly, and humbly seek to present what needs to be presented with quality.

AWESOME mentors

Awesome visual techs are always looking to train others who are technically savvy, but who are also creatively strong. They look for youth who love video, tech, and visuals, and get those young people shadowing them as they do each worship service. They want to give their job away.
